

IACHR | The US must keep funding human rights body

01.03.2019

The US must not cut funding for the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, urge fifty civil society organisations and experts. The Commission plays a key role promoting democratic processes and better human rights standards across the Americas. The US should give it strong political and financial backing.

ISHR has joined fifty other civil society organisations and experts calling on the US not to cut funding for the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights.

The U.S State Department is considering curtailing funding upon the request of nine US senators.

'Cutting funding to a body that works to prevent and address violations in the Americas is counter-productive. During such political and economic flux, now's the time to be investing in promoting the respect of human rights,' said ISHR's Eleanor Openshaw. 'We urge the State Department to boost not cut support to the Commission.'

Full press release:

NEW YORK, WASHINGTON D.C. – A group of fifty civil society organizations and experts are joining calls by Members of Congress and United States nominees and former commissioners of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) to maintain strong U.S. support and funding to the IACHR as the hemisphere's principal human rights organ.

The call comes as the U.S. State Department considers curtailing funding for the IACHR, upon a request made by nine senators on December 21st, 2018. The undersigned organizations are extremely concerned that cutting or eliminating US funding would put the IACHR at a severe disadvantage in uplifting core values in the American Hemisphere—democracy, human rights, and the rule of law.

The fifty organizations and experts echo previous letters sent to U.S. Secretary of State Pompeo in February by Members of Congress, former commissioners, and nominees. The IACHR leads on efforts to fight violence, corruption, censorship, and trafficking, and to promote victims' rights and regional responses to refugee crises throughout the Americas. The signatory organizations agree that it would be a severe misstep for the U.S. government to cut off funding to a respected organization that is mandated to protect democracy and human rights in the Americas.

Created in 1959, the IACHR is an autonomous organ of the Organization of American States (OAS) that monitors and defends human rights. The IACHR considers petitions from individuals who claim that their rights have been violated by a Member State, and they cannot find justice in their own country. The IACHR can also take concrete measures to protect individuals and groups whose lives are in imminent danger. It is also its duty to monitor the human rights situation in the Member States.

In the 1970s and 1980s, the IACHR challenged and reported abuses by repressive regimes, becoming instrumental in helping to facilitate the region's transition to democracy. More recently, it has been a leading institution in developing human rights standards.

The signatory organizations and individuals call on all OAS Member States, including the United States, to continue supporting the IACHR and ensuring it can meet its mandate. The IACHR's continued leadership on human rights has importance beyond the region, and it must be safeguarded.
